DETTER'S HAIR RESTORATIVE

Indian Affairs Again.

We have received a communication from Mr J T Outhouse, of Dallas, in which he admits that he was the author of the letter, an extract from which was published by us on the 12th March, with some comments upon the fact that a man, expressing such sentiments was in the employ of the Indian Department, who, as we were informed, wrote them "after he had obtained a profitable situation by professions of loyalty" Mr O says we were mistaken as to the time of his service, and thus states the matter.

The letter is dated January 24, 1863. I went into Mr Condon's office as clerk, April 1, 1863, therefore that could not be As to my professions of loyalty, I never was questioned as to my sentiments, when I took the situation It was offered to me without any application on my part Mr Simpson obtained it for me, knowing I did not endorse the bigger policy of the Administration I have never changed my views, nor disguised them, and I think I can defend them Your remarks, then, on my letter, or rather on my getting the situation, are not correct doubtless you have been misinformed, I profess to be a Union man and truly loyal, if I am to be judged by any proper standard for either.

Mr Outhouse then makes an accusation against certain parties in Polk county as to the manner of obtaining the letter, which we omit, as the copy we have was furnished to us by a citizen of Marion county whose character is above reproach. We do not know how the original was obtained, and of course do not justify any unlawful act to get it. We do not see, however, why Mr O. should object to any exposure of his real sentiments, as he frankly and boldly avows that he has constantly entertained them, and that it was known that such were his views at the time of his appointment. It rather surprises us that he was willing, while he felt such a disposition toward the Administration, to hold any office in its gift, and it is still more surprising that an Indian Agent, knowing his opinions, should, without any application on his own part, have procured a situation for I am when there are many equally competent and much more loyal, who would have been glad to serve and to support the Government That there may be no misunderstanding as to the sort of opinions which were approved by the appointment of Mr. Outhouse, if what he says is true as to them being known when he was appointed, we quote again a part of his letter. It shows what kind of men has been used for public officers

Now we here. The Democrats are all united against the Administration, and the prospects are, we will clean the rascals out at the next election All I have to say is damn such an Administration and such a policy Such a set of thieves never yet got possession of the Government. Their programme is the abolition of slavery and colonization in the Southern States Drive out the Southern men, giving their lands to negroes with Yankee overseers, and they cry, the Union and the Constitution! To hell with all such Unionism If the country is ruined, it will be ruled by abolitionists and secessionists, but I think the Union loving, conservative Democracy will yet save the nation. So mote it be.

THE OPPOSITION TO THE MINT.—It appears from the item in our news summary, in regard to Senator Nesmith's speech, that he charges the attempt to defeat the establishment of a Branch Mint in this city, and of an Assay Office at the Dalles, upon Mr Chase, and the Director of the Philadelphia Mint. Opposition from these sources is unaccountable, unless upon the ground of public economy, and we are confident that a full knowledge of the facts would satisfy both of them that the measure eminently deserves success. We hope the statistics upon the subject are full, and will be brought to their notice, so that a thorough understanding of the wants of this part of the Pacific coast, may disarm all opposition.

MILITARY CHANGES ON THIS COAST.—The Washington correspondent of the Sacramento Union, makes the following statement, which we are glad to see, so far as it relates to the loyalty and fidelity of Gen. Alvord:

In a former letter reference was made to the changes which it is proposed to make in the Department of the Pacific, and it was said that sundry officials in Oregon and Washington were to be mustered out of service No part of that, however, was intended to apply to Brigadier General Alvord, commanding in Oregon, who is reported to be an honest and loyal man; but to some of his subordinates, who have since been taken care of Generul Alvord will be relieved when General Wright is, and will be ordered to report at some headquarters in the Atlantic States It is also likely that before long the entire military in Oregon and Washington Territory will be ordered from thence, and the officers subordinate will of course go with them The Commanding General for the Department of the Pacific has not been guessed out by any one of the California newspapers which have come to hand up to this date.

DONATION TO THE REV MR ATKINSON.—As mentioned the fact last week that the friends of Mr Atkinson surprised him on Thursday evening, and will add that by skilful management he and his family were decoyed to a neighbor's house and while absent his residence was captured and completely occupied by a crowd of "sympathizers" He was then sent for, on a pretense devised by females of ingenuity, and on his return was so thoroughly and beautifully astonished that no language could do justice to the subject An abundant collation was furnished by the guests, and after all had joyously shared it, one of the party somewhat abruptly addressed the Reverend gentleman and his wife, telling them exactly what sort of a feeling was generally entertained towards him by those who had known him for many years, and by those among whom he had lately come as a minister and neighbor, and closed by presenting to him as a proof of their sentiments, a purse containing $360, and to her another with $52 50 the last being contributed by the ladies exclusively The unexpected gift was acknowledged in a brief reply, full of gratitude and good wishes to the donors, and after some excellent singing, the company separated, seeming to be glad that it had been the privilege to take part in a testimonial so worthily bestowed It should be stated also, that in addition to the money, several articles, amounting in value to about one hundred dollars, were presented to the family, and were received with hearty thanks Such surprise parties are subject to the objection that [illegible] be glad if similar ones could be administered to every clergyman in the city, for they are among our best, most public spirited and beneficial citizens, and no one will deny that their compensation is much lower than their services and abilities ought to command

LOSS OF AN OLD ACQUAINTANCE.—By reference to the memorandum of the steamship Panama, it will be perceived that the bark Ocean Bird, Capt Blake, "turned turtle" on the lower coast on the 3d inst, just at the commencement of one of the most terrific gales by which this coast has been visited during the season The Ocean Bird was an old acquaintance in Portland having been one of Abernethy & Clarke's line of packets, in the earlier years of Oregon lumber producing, and was subsequently sold to the Puget Sound trade At the time of her loss she was owned by George A Meigs proprietor of the Portland Mail [illegible] and for a time been a source of income to some of her owners She was a heavily timbered, consructed [illegible] ship, of some 300 tons burden [illegible] at last she succumbed to the power, whose fierceness of fury she had not more than a double decade of years to rue Capt Blake and his crew were providential They suffered extremely during the five days they were drifting upon the wreck

ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.—A young couple of this city, who had serious obstacles raised against their marriage by opposition to the match, finally consummated their wishes, against all encroachments upon the affections by outside parties, yesterday, and by the maneuver considerable romance attaches itself to their wedding The steamer Rescue was fired up in the morning and dropped down below the city a short distance, where a carriage was in waiting, with the expectant bride and bridegroom, and a few friends, who they immediately embarked, and proceeded to Vancouver, where the ceremonies were performed that made them man and wife The steamer then returned, landing at the foot of Alder street, and we understand that conciliatory measures had been adopted, and when they arrived home it will went merry as a marriage bell."

THE LAST OF SUNDAY TRIPS.—The People's Transportation Company have regularly sent a steamer on Sunday from Portland to Oregon City, since last fall, for the purpose of carrying the mails and passengers of the California Stage Company, to enable them to make better time than was possible by land, during the worst state of the roads But as the coaches are expected to be running to this city by Friday next, yesterday was the last "Sunday trip" of the steamer Senator, for this season

WASHINGTON GUARDS.—At an election for officers to Company B, Capt Mills, held at their Armory on Saturday last, the following officers were chosen 1st Lieut. Wm Young 2d Lieut. T B. ABBOTT'S GREAT HISTORY OF THE WAR.—We are informed by Mr Butler, the agent for this work, that the second volume will soon be received; when subscribers will be immediately furnished The agent advertises in another column for a few more enterprising canvassers

EVERYTHING THAT CAN BE DESIRED.—Chas Barrett received by the steamer a full supply of all the pictorials, magazines, and newspapers, which are worth reading All who want to know anything more than they can learn from the OREGONIAN can find an abundance at his store

A MISTAKE.—The Portland correspondent of the Marysville Appeal, writing under date of March 31st, says "Miss Julia Dean Hayne is engaged to appear on the William's boards soon supported by Frances R Gass and Sallie B Waldron." We suppose it meant George B. Waldron, as he still wears pants.

Relieving Guard.

March 4th, 1864.

Came the Relief. "What, Sentry, ho!
How passed the night through the long waking?"
"Cold, cheerless, dark—as may befall
The hour before their rein is breaking."

"No sight? no sound?" "Not in these," save
The plover from the marshes chilling,
And in yon Western sky, about
An hour ago, a Star was falling."

"A star? There's nothing strange in that."
"No, nothing; but, above the thicket
Somehow it seemed to me that God
Somewhere had just relieved a picket!"

Millionaires' Maxims.

Many of those who have risen to elevated positions by unlocking the golden gates of wealth, have favored the world with very valuable opinions which they regarded as the key to their success, and a recapitulation of some of them will afford us entertainment, and perhaps instruction.

Baron Rothschild is said to have ascribed his early success to the following rules:

1. "I combined three profits; I made the manufacturer my customer, and the one I bought of my customer; that is, I supplied the manufacturer with raw materials and dyes; on each of which I made a profit, and took his manufactured goods, which I sold at a profit; and thus combined three profits.

3. Make a bargain at once. Be an off-hand man.

3. Never have anything to do with an unlucky man or place. "I have seen," said he, "many clever men who had not shoes to their feet. I never act with them; their advice sounds very well, but fate is against them; they cannot get on themselves; how can they do good to me?

4. "Be cautious and bold. It requires a great deal of boldness and a great deal of caution to make a great fortune; and when you have got it, it requires ten times as much wit to keep it."

The continued prosperity of the eminent banking house of the Rothschilds, is ascribed in the following biographical extract, to two principles: "He who does not delay for casualties, and has knowledge enough to perceive that in all great affairs the success not only depends on the choice and use of the favorable moment, but especially on the pursuit of an acknowledged fundamental maxim, will soon perceive that particularly two principles were never neglected by this banking house; to which, besides a prudent performance of its business and to advantageous conjunctures, it owes the greatest part of its present wealth and respectability."

The first of these principles was that which caused the five brothers to carry on their business in a perpetual and uninterrupted communion. This was the golden rule bequeathed to them by their dying father. Since his death, every position, let it come from whom it may, is the object of their common deliberations. Every important undertaking was carried on by a combined effort, after a plan agreed upon, and all had an equal share in the result. Though for several years their customary residences were very remote, this circumstance could never interrupt their harmony; it rather gave them this advantage, that they were always perfectly well instructed of the condition of things in the different capitals—that each of them on his part, could the better prepare and institute the affairs to be undertaken by the firm.—The second principle is perpetual view of this house is, not to seek an excessive profit in any undertaking; to assign certain limits to every enterprise; and, as much as human caution and prudence can do, to make themselves independent of the play of accidental."

David Ricardo, the celebrated political economist, was born in London, of a Jewish family, in 1772. His character for probity, industry and talent, early procured for him the means of support; and, becoming a member of the Stock Exchange, he accumulated an immense property. He is author of many works on finance; and in 1819 was elected to parliament. Died 1823. He had what he called his own three golden rules; the observance of which he used to press on his private friends. These were:

"Never to refuse an option when you can get it.

"Cut short your losses.

"Let your profits run on."

By [illegible] short one's losses, Mr. Ricardo [illegible] as a member had made a pur[illegible], and prices were falling; he [illegible] resell immediately. And by letting [illegible] run on, he meant that, when a [illegible] possessed stock, and the prices were rising, he ought not to sell until prices had reached their highest, and were beginning again to fall. These are, indeed, golden rules and may be applied with advantage to innu[illegible] transactions other than those con[illegible] the Stock Exchange.

[illegible] was born on the 24th day [illegible] within the environs of Bor[illegible]. He sailed to the West [illegible] boy, when only twelve [illegible] after residing there some [illegible] United States. He fol[illegible]e, captain, and part [illegible] a while, and accumula[illegible]. He entered into partner[illegible], Hasselhurst, of Philadelphia, [illegible] two vessels to commence the [illegible] that they were captured, and [illegible] from the firm.

During the war, he was at Mount Holly, in the business of bottling claret and cider. In 1779, he returned to Philadelphia, and entered upon the New Orleans and St. Domingo trade. He then tried a partnership with his brother, which, in the course of three or four years, exploded, as usual, in a rupture. Shortly after this, his prospects were materially aided by the acquisition of $50,000, deposited in one of his vessels during the insurrection at St. Domingo, and for which, the owners never called. In 1791, he commenced ship-building, and from that time until his death, was engaged in various mercantil speculations, and in banking. In 1811, he had $1,000,000 in the hands of the Baring's, who were then in imminent danger of failure. Had they failed, it is very probable that Girard College would never have been built. The effect on his peculiar constitution of mind would, most likely, have proved fatal. He died in 1832, estimated to be worth $12,000,000!

He never gave an opinion on the causes of his success. When requested to furnish incidents of his life, he refused replying: "My actions must make my life." We can probably glean his opinion from the following:

"A gentleman from Europe purchased a bill of exchange on Girard, to pay the expenses of a tour to this country. It was duly honored on presentation, but in the course of their transactions, it so happened that one cent remained to be refunded on the part of the European; and, on the eve of his departure from this country, Girard dunned him for it. The gentleman apologized, and tendered him a six and a quarter cent piece, requesting the difference. Mr. Girard tendered him in change five cents, which the gentleman declined to an additional quarter of a cent. In reply, Girard admitted the fact, but informed him that it was not in his power to comply, as the government neglected to provide the fractional coin in question, returned the gentleman the six and a quarter cent piece, reminding him, however, that he must still consider him his debtor for the balance.

"An acquaintance was invited to witness the improvements at his farm, and was shown to a strawberry bed, which had been in the greater part gleaned of its contents, and told that he might gather fruit in that bed, when the owner took leave. That friend, finding that this tract had been nearly stripped of its fruit by his predecessors, strayed to another tract, which appeared to bear more abundantly, when he was accosted by Mr. Girard: 'I told you,' said he, 'that you might gather strawberries only in that bed.'"

"We saw that remarkable man (Girard) after his head was white with the frosts of nearly four-score years, and could not help noticing, even then, the minute attention which he gave to the most trivial thing that could affect his fortune. 'Take that lot of fowls away; the roosters are too many; they would keep the hens poor,' said the old merchant to a farmer, who had brought them for one of Girard's ships,—'take them away, I will not buy them.'"

"Take care of the cents and the dollars will take care of themselves," was evidently his opinion.

John McDonogh, the millionaire of New Orleans, is accredited with the most valuable opinion on the subject. It was narrated by a lawyer of New Orleans, as a reminiscence of a personal interview with McDonogh, and is as follows:

"I said to Mr. McDonogh, 'You are a rich man and I know that you intend to leave all your property to be expended in charitable purposes. I have been thinking over your singular life, and I want you to give me some advice in regard to the great success which has attended you, for I, too, would like to become very rich, having a family, so as to leave my heirs wealthy.' 'Well,' said he 'get up, sir;' and as I rose from my arm chair, he took my seat, and, turning to me as if he was proprietor and I his clerk, said, pointing to a common chair in which he had been sitting, 'Sit down, sir, and I will tell you how I became a rich man, and how, by following three rules, you can become as rich as myself.'

"'I first came to Louisiana,' continued he, 'when it was a Spanish colony, as the agent for a house in Baltimore and a house in Boston, to dispose of certain cargoes of goods. After I had settled up their accounts, and finished their agency, I set up to do business for myself. I had become acquainted with the Spanish governor, who had taken a fancy to me, although I had not so much as flattered him, and through his influence I obtained a contract for the army, by which I made $10,000. After this, I gave a splendid dinner to the principal officers of the army and the governor, and by it obtained another contract, by which I made $30,000.

"'This is what the French and Creoles do not understand. I mean the spending of money judiciously. They are afraid of spending money. A man who wishes to make a fortune must first make a show of liberality, and spend money in order to obtain it. By that dinner which I gave to the Spanish authorities, I obtained their good will and esteem, and by this I was enabled to make a large sum of money. To succeed in life, then, you must obtain the favor and influence of the opulent, and the authorities of the country in which you live. This is the first rule.'

"'The natural span of man's life, observed Mr. McDonogh, 'is too short, if he is abandoned to his own resources, to acquire great wealth, and, therefore, in order to realize a fortune, you must exercise your influence and power over those who, in point of wealth, are inferior to you, and, by availing yourself of their talents, knowledge, and information, turn them to your own advantage.

"'This is the second rule.' Here he made a long pause, as if lost in thought, and seeing him remain silent, I asked, 'Is that all?'—'No,' said he, 'there is a third and last rule which it is all-essential for you to observe, in order that success may attend your efforts.' 'And what is that?, I inquired.

"'Why, sir,' said he, 'it is Prayer. You must pray to the Almighty with fervor and zeal, and you will be sustained in all your desires. I never pray sincerely to God, in all my life, without having my prayer answered satisfactorily.' He stopped, and I said, 'Is this all?' He answered, 'Yes, sir; follow my advice, and you will become a rich man.' And he arose and left me.

"Well," asked one of the company, "have you followed his advice?"

"No!" said the counsellor. "I have not, for certain reasons. I do not wish to be considered harsh in drawing the conclusions I did from Mr. McDonogh's advice. They were, that when a man desires to become rich, he must corrupt the high, oppress the poor, and look to God to sustain him."

Washington specials say the Senate and House Committees on Foreign Affairs have had the Mexican question under consideration for some time, but have refrained from taking action thereupon in the special interest of Secretary Seward, who informed the Committees that he did not want any action taken by them as it might interfere with his negotiations and negotiations with the French Government. The House Committee have become tired of waiting, and resolved to report a series of resolutions emphatically maintaining the Monroe doctrine. McDougall has also prepared a series of similar resolutions which he will shortly bring before the Senate, sustaining them with a speech.
